Syn.: male, manful, manlike, manly, mannish, virile. We apply male to the sex, masculine to the qualities, especially to the stronger, hardier, and more imperious qualities that distinguish the male sex; as applied to women, masculine has often the depreciatory sense of unwomanly, rude, or harsh; as, a masculine face or voice, or the like; still one may say in a commendatory way, she acted with masculine courage or decision. Manlike may mean only having the outward appearance or semblance of a man, or may be closely equivalent to manly. Manly refers to all the qualities and traits worthy of a man; manful, especially to the valor and prowess that become a man; we speak of a manful struggle, manly decision; we say manly gentleness or tenderness; we could not say manful tenderness. Mannish is a depreciatory word referring to the mimicry or parade of some superficial qualities of manhood: as, a mannish boy or woman. Masculine may apply to the distinctive qualities of the male sex at any age; virile applies to the distinctive qualities of mature manhood only, as opposed not only to feminine or womanly but to childish, and is thus an emphatic word for sturdy, intrepid, etc. —Ant.: see synonyms for FEMININE.

Mathematical Signs.

1. Signs of Statement, indicating the relationship of the quantities between which they are written: used in either geometry or algebra, except where expressly limited.

= Is equal to; equals; as, 4+2 = 6. > Is greater than; exceeds: as, 4 + 2 > 5. < Is less than; as, 4 + 2 < 7. ≮ or ≯ Is either equal to or less than; does not exceed. ≱ or ≦ Is either equal to or greater than; is not less than. ∝ Varies as; is always proportional to; as, when a is the area of a varying circle and d its diameter, $a \propto d^2$. ∷ Equals (used only between ratios); as, a : b ∷ c : d (the ratio of a to b equals the ratio of c to d: generally read "a is to b as c is to d"). ⊥ Is perpendicular to (in geometry); as, AB ⊥ CD. ∥ Is parallel with (in geometry); as, AB ∥ CD.

2. Signs of Operation, each indicating some particular operation to be performed upon the quantity before which or the quantities between which it stands, the combination of symbols and signs standing collectively for the result of such operation.

+ Plus; added to: indicating, with the quantities between which it is placed, the sum of those quantities. − Minus; less; indicating, with the quantities between which it is placed, the excess of the first over the second. [+ and − when placed at the end of a decimal indicate that it is only approximately correct, plus signifying that a negligible quantity (generally less than half a unit in the last place) must be added, and minus that such a quantity must be subtracted: thus, the result of dividing 10 by 3 may be written 3.33 +; of dividing 20 by 3, 6.67 −. Placed before single quantities, these signs indicate that they are to be taken positively or negatively; as, a temperature of + 50° or − 6°. ± Plus or minus. × or · Multiplied by: indicating a product, more commonly denoted by simple juxtaposition; as, $a \times b$, $a \cdot b$, or ab (read "a multiplied by b"; "a into b"; or, in the last instance, simply "ab"). ÷ (or rarely ⊥) Divided by: indicating the quotient of the first quantity by the second: more often denoted as a fraction; as, $a \div b$, $a \perp b$, or $\frac{a}{b}$ (read "a divided by b," or, in the last case, "a over b"). : To: denoting the ratio of the first quantity to the second: often denoted by a fraction, as in the last case; as, a : b or $\frac{a}{b}$ (read, "the ratio of a to b").

~ (or rarely −:) The difference between: used in cases where it is uncertain or unimportant which quantity is the greater. $\sqrt[2]{}$, $\sqrt[3]{}$, $\sqrt[4]{}$, etc. The second, third, fourth, etc., root of: commonly called the radical sign. When no number is written above it, 2 is understood; as, $\sqrt{36} = 6$; $\sqrt[5]{32} = 2$. Roots are denoted also by the denominators of fractional exponents; thus, $a^{1/2} = \sqrt{a}$; $a^{1/5} = \sqrt[5]{a}$. 2, 3, 4, etc.

———, (), or [ ] Inclusion: indicating no operation by itself, but that the quantities included are affected alike by the same operation; thus, 2 (a+b), 2[a+b], or 2 a+b indicates twice the sum of a and b, while 2*a*+b indicates the result of adding b to twice a. f or F Function of: some unspecified function of, the following quantity being generally enclosed in parentheses; as, $y = f(x)$. [When several different but undetermined functions are to be noted, the sign may be primed, or other symbols (generally Greek letters, as ϕ, ψ, or χ) may be used. Other Greek letters are used for particular functions defined and treated of at length in mathematical works.] d The differential of; as, dx. δ The variation or change of; as, δx. Δ The finite difference of. D The derivative of. The variable with respect to which the derivative is taken is often written as an inferior character.

$\int$ The integral of. The sign is repeated when successive integrations are to be performed, except when these are too numerous; when they exceed 3, the number is usually written as an exponent. The variable with respect to which the integration is to be performed is sometimes written as an inferior character. The limits of the integration are written as superior and inferior characters; thus, $\int_b^a x dx$ indicates that $x dx$ is to be integrated from the point where $x = b$ to the point where $x = a$. Σ The sum of; the sum of all terms of the form following: a symbol whose exact meaning is often more definitely fixed by the context. The limits of the summation may be written above and below the sign Σ. Π The product of: used similarly to Σ. ($\overline{\Delta}$) The quantic whose literal coefficients and facients are given, the numerical coefficients and the exponents being the same as those obtained by raising the sum of the facients to the indicated power; thus, $(a, b, c, d \overline{\Delta} x, y)^3 = ax^3 + 3bx^2y + 3cxy^2 + dy^3$. ($\overline{\Sigma}$) Same as the above with the omission of the numerical coefficients; thus, $(a, b, c, d \overline{\Sigma} x, y)^3 = ax^3 + bx^2y + cxy^2 + y^3$. ! or ⌊ Factorial (see FACTORIAL); thus, 5 ! or ⌊ 5 (read "factorial 5") = 1×2×3×4×5 = 120. ∇ The space-variation of. S The scalar part of (a quaternion). V The vector part of (a quaternion). T The tensor of (a quaternion). U The versor of (a quaternion). [For symbols of trigonometrical functions, see TRIGONOMETRICAL.]

3. Common and Important Constants. ∞ Infinity (see INFINITY). 0 Zero; also, a quantity infinitely small. π The ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter (3.141592 +); also, in circular measure, an angle of 180°. e or ε (1) The base of the Naperian system of logarithms (2.71828 +). (2) The eccentricity of a conic. g The acceleration of gravity (32.17076 feet per second, multiplied by the difference between unity and 0.00259 times the cosine of double the latitude); for ordinary practical purposes, 32.2. R°. The radius of a circle in degrees of its arc (57°.29578). R′, R″ The radius in minutes and seconds of arc.

4. Simple Abbreviations, used chiefly in geometrical demonstration. ∴ Therefore. ∵ Because; since. . . . . And so on. □ (1) Square; the square; as, □ ABCD. (2) In geography, square miles. ▭ Rectangle. △ Triangle. ○ Circumference; circle; also, 360°. ⌒ Arc. ∠ The angle. ⌊ or ⊥ Right angle.

Syn.: harmony, music, unison. Harmony is simultaneous; melody is successive; harmony is the pleasing correspondence of two or more notes sounded at once, melody the pleasing succession of a number of notes continuously following one another. A melody may be wholly in one part; harmony must be of two or more parts. Accordant notes of different pitch sounded simultaneously produce harmony; unison is the simultaneous sounding of two or more notes of the same pitch. When the pitch is the same, there may be unison between sounds of very different volume and quality, as a voice and a bell may sound in unison. Tones sounded at the interval of an octave are also said to be in unison, but this is not literally exact; this usage arises from the fact that bass and tenor voices in attempting to sound the same note as the soprano and alto will in fact sound a note an octave below. Music may denote the simplest melody or the most complex and perfect harmony. Syn.: benevolence, benignity, blessing, clemency, compassion, favor, forbearance, forgiveness, gentleness, grace, kindness, leniency, leniency, lenity, mildness, pardon, pity, tenderness. Mercy is the exercise of less severity than one deserves, or in a more extended sense, the granting of kindness or favor beyond what one may rightly claim. Clemency is a word of more than mercy, and without its religious associations, signifying mildness and moderation in the use of power where severity would have legal or military, rather than moral, sanction; it often denotes a habitual mildness of disposition on the part of the powerful, and is matter rather of good nature or policy than of principle. Leniency or lenity denotes an easy-going avoidance of severity; these words are more general and less magisterial than clemency; we should speak of the leniency of a parent, the clemency of a conqueror. Grace is favor, kindness, or blessing shown to the undeserving; forgiveness, mercy, and pardon are exercised toward the ill-deserving. Pardon remits the outward penalty which the offender deserves; forgiveness dismisses resentment or displeasure from the heart of the one offended: mercy seeks the highest possible good of the offender. Mercy is also used in the wider sense of refraining from harshness or cruelty toward those who are in one's power without fault of their own; as, they besought the robber to have mercy. See LENITY; PITY.—Ant.: cruelty, hardness, harshness, implacability, justice, penalty, punishment, revenge, rigor, severity, sternness, vengeance.—Prep.: the mercy of God to or toward sinners; have mercy on or upon one.—Fathers or Priests of Mercy, a Roman Catholic society of missionary priests, founded in France in 1806 by Jean Baptiste Rauzan, chaplain to Louis XVIII., and planted in the United States in 1839. The Metric System

This is a system of weights and measures depending upon the meter, in which the original factors are derived from the meter. The system includes measures of length, of which the meter is the unit; measures of surface, of which the are is the unit; measures of capacity, of which the liter is the unit; and weights, of which the gram is the unit. Ascending in value from each unit the measure is multiplied by ten, and bears a Greek prefix indicating its value, as decameter, which is 10 meters. While descending in value the terms bear Latin prefixes indicating their relation to the unit, as decimeter, which is $^1/_{10}$ of a meter. The prefix mega-, when employed, denotes a multiple by one million; the prefix micro-, the millionth part. The following tables show the various units with corresponding factors in other systems. The metric system originated in France, where it was definitely adopted in 1799, and has been legalized by the United States and Great Britain. It is in use in almost every civilized nation, and is the accepted standard among scientific men of all nations.

[STEWART '10.] [< AS. gemynd, < munan, think.]

Syn.: brain, consciousness, disposition, instinct, intellect, intelligence, reason, sense, soul, spirit, thought, understanding. Mind, in a general sense, includes all the powers of sentient being apart from the physical factors in bodily faculties and activities; in a limited sense, mind is nearly synonymous with intellect, but includes disposition, or the tendency toward action, as appears in the phrase "to have a mind to work." The intellect is that assemblage of faculties which is concerned with knowledge, as distinguished from emotion and volition. Understanding is the Saxon word of the same general import, but is chiefly used of the reasoning powers: the understanding, which Sir Wm. Hamilton has called "the faculty of relations and comparisons," is distinguished by many philosophers from reason in that "reason is the faculty of the higher cognitions or a priori truth." Thought, the act, process, or power of thinking, is often used to denote the thinking faculty, and especially the reason. The instinct of animals is now held by many philosophers to be of the same nature as the intellect of man, but inferior and limited; yet the apparent difference is very great. "An instinct is a propensity prior to experience and independent of instruction." PALEY Natural Philosophy ch. 18. In this sense we speak of human instincts, thus denoting tendencies independent of reasoning or instruction. As the seat of mental activity, brain (colloquially brains) is often used as a synonym for mind, intellect, intelligence. Sense may be an antonym of intellect, as when we speak of the sense of hearing; but sense is used also as denoting clear mental action, good judgment, acumen; as, he is a man of sense, or, he showed good sense; sense, even in its material signification, must be reckoned among the activities of mind, but dependent on bodily functions; the mind, not the eye, really sees; the mind, not the ear, really hears. Consciousness includes all that a sentient being perceives, knows, thinks, or feels, from whatever source arising and of whatever character, kind, or degree, whether with or without distinct thinking, feeling, or willing; we speak of the consciousness of the brute or of the sage. See GENIUS; SOUL; UNDERSTANDING.—Ant.: body, brawn, brute force, material substance, matter.

[< AS. nama, name.]

Syn.: agnomen, appellation, cognomen, denomination, designation, epithet, style, title. Name in the most general sense includes all other words of this group; in the more limited sense a name is personal, an appellation is descriptive, a title is official. In the phrase William the Conqueror, king of England, William is the man's name, which belongs to him personally, independently of any rank or achievement; Conqueror is the appellation which he won by his acquisition of England; king is the title denoting his royal rank. An epithet is by derivation something placed upon a person or thing; the epithet does not strictly belong to an object like a name, but is given to mark some assumed characteristic, good or bad, now usually the latter. An epithet is always an adjective, or a word or phrase used as an adjective, and is properly used to emphasize a characteristic but not to add information, as in the phrase "the sounding sea"; the idea that an epithet is always opprobrious, and that any word used opprobriously is an epithet, is a popular error. Designation may be used much in the sense of appellation, but is far broader and more general in meaning; a designation properly so called rests upon some inherent quality, while an appellation may be fanciful. One's personal name, as John or Mary, is given in infancy, and is often called the given name or Christian name, or simply the first name. The cognomen or surname is the family name which belongs to one by right of birth or marriage. In modern use, style is the legal designation by which a person or house is known in official or business relations; as, the name and style of Baring Brothers. A denomination is a specific, and especially a collective name; the term is applied to a separate religious organization, without the opprobrious meaning attaching to the word sect; . lso to money or notes of a certain value; as, the sum was in notes of the denomination of one thousand dollars. See TERM.

That which is requisite (or required) is so in the judgment of the person requiring it, but not absolutely; thus the requisite is more a matter of personal feeling than the indispensable. Inevitable and unavoidable are applied to things which some at least would escape or prevent, while that which is necessary may meet with no objection; food is necessary, death is inevitable; a necessary conclusion satisfies a thinker; an inevitable conclusion silences opposition. Needed and needful are more concrete than necessary, and respect an end to be attained, while necessary may apply simply to what exists; we speak of a necessary inference; necessary food is what one can not live without, while needful food is that without which we can not enjoy comfort, health, and strength.—Ant.: casual, contingent, needless, non-essential, optional, unnecessary, useless, worthless.—Prep.: necessary to a sequence or a total; for or to a result or a person; unity is necessary to (to constitute) completeness; decision is necessary for command, or for a commander.

Syn.: compulsion, destiny, emergency, essential, exigency, extremity, fatality, fate, indispensability, indispensableness, need, requirement, requisite, sine qua non, unavoidableness, urgency, want. An essential is something, as a quality, or element, that belongs to the essence of something else so as to be inseparable from it in its normal condition, or in any complete idea or statement of it. Need and want always imply a lack; necessity may be used in this sense, but in the higher philosophical sense necessity simply denotes the exclusion of any alternative either in thought or fact; righteousness is a necessity (not a need) of the divine nature. Need suggests the possibility of supplying the deficiency which want expresses; to speak of a person's want of decision merely points out a weakness in his character; to say that he has need of decision implies that he can exercise or attain it. As applied to a deficiency, necessity is more imperative than need; a weary person is in need of rest; when rest becomes a necessity he has no choice but to stop work. See PREDESTINATION; WANT. Compare NECESSARY.—Ant.: choice, contingency, doubt, doubtfulness, dubiousness, fortuity, freedom, option, possibility, uncertainty.—Prep.: the necessity of surrender: a necessity for action; this is a necessity to me.

Syn.: carelessness, default, disregard, failure, heedlessness, inadvertence, inattention, indifference, neglectfulness, negligence, oversight, remissness, slackness, slight. Neglect is the failing to take such care, show such attention, pay such courtesy, etc., as may be rightfully or reasonably expected. Negligence, which is the same in origin, may be used in almost the same sense, but with a slighter force, as when Whittier speaks of "the negligence which friendship loves"; but negligence is often used to denote the quality or trait of character of which the act is a manifestation, or to denote the habit of neglecting that which ought to be done. Neglect is transitive, negligence is intransitive; we speak of neglect of his books, friends, or duties, in which cases we could not use negligence; negligence in dress implies want of care as to its arrangement, tidiness, etc.; neglect of one's garments would imply leaving them exposed to defacement or injury, as by dust, moths, etc. Neglect has a passive sense which negligence has not; the child was suffering from neglect, that is, from being neglected by others; the child was suffering from negligence would imply that he himself was neglectful. The distinction sometimes made that neglect denotes the act, and negligence the habit, is but partially true; one may be guilty of habitual neglect of duty; the wife may suffer from her husband's constant neglect, while the negligence which causes a railroad accident may be that of a moment, and on the part of one ordinarily careful and attentive; in such cases the law provides punishment for criminal negligence. For the trait of character we say negligence rather than neglect. See SLIGHT. For verb see LOSE; SLIGHT.—Ant.: see synonyms for CARE.—Prep.: neglect of duty; of the child by the parent; neglect on the part of the teacher.

Syn.: altho, but, howbeit, however, nevertheless, still, tho, yet. However simply waives discussion and (like the archaic howbeit) says, "be that as it may, this is true"; nevertheless concedes the truth of what precedes, but claims that what follows is none the less true; notwithstanding marshals the two statements face to face, admits the one and its seeming contradiction to the other, while insisting that it can not, after all, withstand the other; as, notwithstanding the force of the enemy is superior, we shall conquer. Yet and still are weaker than notwithstanding, while stronger than but. Tho and altho make as little as possible of the concession, dropping it, as it were, incidentally; as, "tho we are guilty, thou art good"; to say "we are guilty, but thou art good," would make the concession of guilt more emphatic. See BUT.—notwithstanding that, altho.

O¹, o, 1 ō; 2 ō, n. [OEs, O's, or Os, 1 ōz; 2 ōs, pl.] 1. A letter: the fifteenth in the English alphabet.

In this book the sounds of o are indicated in Key 1 by the following symbols: (1) o as in obey; (2) ō as in go; (3) e as in not; (4) ē as in nor; (5) ə for o as in atom, actor; (6) ū (rule) for o as in move, prove; (7) u (full) for o as in wolf; (8) u (fun) for o as in come; (9) ū (burn) for o as in whorl; (10) i (pin) for o as in women. The letter is used also in the following associations: (1) oa = ō, as in load (lōd); (2) oe = ō, as in toe (tō); (3) oe = ū, as in shoe (shū); (4) oe = u, as in does (duz); (5) œ = ī, as in Phœnix (fī'nıks); (6) oi = ȯi, as in oil; (7) oy = ȯi, as in boy; (8) oo = u, as in good (gud); (9) oo = u, as in blood (blud); (10) oo = ū, as in pool (pūl); (11) oo = ō, as in floor (flōr), see below; (12) ou = au, as in loud (laud); (13) ou = ō, as in pour (pōr), see below; (14) ou = ū, as in soup (sūp); (15) ou = u, as in rough (ruf); (16) ou = ŭ, as in journey; (17) ow = au, as in now; (18) ow = ō, as in flow (flō); (19) eo = e, as in leopard (lep'ərd); (20) eo = ī, as in people (pī'pl); and (21) ao = ē, as in gaol (jēl). For explanations of the symbols noted above, and for those of Key 2, see page vii.

That which was formerly long o in such words as door, floor, force, ford; fore and its compounds, as forebear, forebode, forecastle, forefather, etc., is now rendered in cultivated English and American speech as o in or. The long o sound, still retained by some dictionaries, is a survival of the dialectal speech of Northern England and provincial speech of some parts of the United States. Capital O is from Greek, Latin O. The Greek, Latin, round form and the name go with the rounding of the mouth in making the sound. 2. Anything shaped like the letter O; an oval or circle; a spot or spangle; as, "Giotto's O." 3. A symbol noting: (1) Logic. A particular negative categorical proposition. (2) Math. Zero or naught: called also a round O; sometimes used by the ancients for 11, and, with a dash over it (Ō), for 11,000. SYN.: aged, ancient, antiquated, antique, decrepit, elderly, gray, hoary, immemorial, obsolete, olden, patriarchal, remote, senile, time-honored, time-worn, venerable. That is termed old which has existed long, or which existed long ago. Old, from the Anglo-Saxon, is the most familiar of this group of words. Familiarity, on one side, is near to contempt; thus we say, an old coat, an old hat. On the other hand, familiarity is akin to tenderness, and thus old is a word of endearment; as, "the old homestead," the "old oaken bucket." "Tell me the old, old story!" Olden is a statelier form of old, and is applied almost exclusively to time, not to places, buildings, persons, etc. As regards periods of time, the familiar are also the near; thus, the old times are not too far away for familiar thought and reference; the olden times are more remote, ancient times still further removed. Aged applies chiefly to long-extended human life. Decrepit, gray, and hoary refer to the effects of age on the body exclusively; senile upon the mind also; as, a decrepit frame, senile garrulousness. One may be aged and neither decrepit nor senile. Elderly is applied to those who have passed middle life, but scarcely reached old age. Remote (L. re, back or away, and moveo, move) primarily refers to space, but is extended to that which is far off in time; as, at some remote period. See ANCIENT; OBSOLETE; PRIMEVAL. Compare ANTIQUE. —ANT.: Compare synonyms for NEW; YOUTHFUL.

Syn.: boast, boasting, display, flourish, pageant, pageantry, parade, pomp, pomposity, pompousness, show, vaunt, vaunting. Ostentation is an ambitious showing forth of whatever is thought adapted to win admiration or praise; ostentation may be without words; as, the ostentation of wealth in fine residences, rich clothing, costly equipage, or the like; when in words, ostentation is rather in manner than in direct statement; as, the ostentation of learning. Boasting is in direct statement, and is louder and more vulgar than ostentation. There may be great display or show with little substantial; ostentation suggests something substantial to be shown. Pomp is some material demonstration of wealth and power, as in grand and stately ceremonial, rich furnishings, processions, etc., considered as worthy of the person or occasion in whose behalf it is manifested; pomp is the noble side of that which as ostentation is considered as arrogant and vain. Pageant and pageantry are inferior to pomp, denoting spectacular display designed to impress the public mind, and since the multitude is largely ignorant and thoughtless, the words pageant and pageantry have a suggestion of the transient and unsubstantial. Parade (L. paro, prepare) is an exhibition as of troops in camp going through the evolutions that are to be used in battle, and suggests a lack of earnestness and direct or immediate occasion or demand; hence, in the more general sense, a parade is an uncalled-for exhibition, and so used is a more disparaging word than ostentation; ostentation may spring merely from undue self-gratulation, parade implies a desire to impress others with a sense of one's abilities or resources, and is always offensive and somewhat contemptible; as, a parade of wealth or learning. Pomposity and pompousness are the affectation of pomp. See PRIDE.—Ant.: diffidence, modesty, quietness, reserve, retirement, shrinking, timidity.

Syn.: should. One ought to do that which he is under moral obligation or in duty bound to do. Ought is the stronger word, of holding most closely to the sense of moral obligation, or sometimes of imperative logical necessity; should may have the sense of moral obligation or may apply merely to propriety or expediency, as in the proverb, "The liar should have a good memory," that is, he will need it. Ought is sometimes used of abstractions or inanimate things as indicating what the mind deems to be imperative or logically necessary in view of all the conditions; as, these goods ought to go into that space; these arguments ought to convince him; should in such connections would be correct, but less emphatic. Compare DUTY. To express past obligation the simple ought unchanged should be used, but followed by the perfect infinitive of the verb required; as, "I ought to have gone."

Syn.: apologize for, cloak, conceal, cover, excuse, extenuate, hide, mitigate, screen, veil. Cloak, from the French, and palliate, from the Latin, are the same in original signification, but have diverged in meaning; a cloak may be used to hide completely the person or some object carried about the person, or it may but partly veil the figure, making the outlines less distinct; cloak is used in the former, palliate in the latter, sense; to cloak a sin is to attempt to hide it from discovery; to palliate it is to attempt to hide some part of its blameworthiness. "When we palliate our own or others' faults we do not seek to cloak them altogether, but only to extenuate the guilt of them in part." TRENCH Study of Words lect. vi, p. 266. Either to palliate or to extenuate is to admit the fault; but extenuate (L. ex, out, + tenuis, thin) seeks especially to lessen the culpability involved; hence we speak of extenuating circumstances, since circumstances, while they can not change the inherent wrong of an act, may yet lessen the blameworthiness of him who does it; palliating a bad thing by giving it a mild name does not make it less evil. In reference to diseases, to palliate is really to diminish their violence, or partly to relieve the sufferer. Syn.: absolve, acquit, condone, excuse, forgive, overlook, pass by, pass over, remit. Forgive has reference to feelings, pardon to consequences; hence, the executive may pardon, but has nothing to do officially with forgiving. Personal injury may be forgiven by the person wronged; thus, God at once forgives and pardons; the pardoned sinner is exempt from punishment; the forgiven sinner is restored to the divine favor. To pardon is the act of a superior, implying the right to punish; to forgive is the privilege of the humblest person who has been wronged or offended. In law, to remit the whole penalty is equivalent to pardoning the offender; but a part of a penalty may be remitted and the remainder inflicted, as where the penalty includes both fine and imprisonment. To condone is to put aside a recognized offense by some act which restores the offender to forfeited right or privilege, and is the act of a private individual, without legal formalities. To excuse is to overlook some slight offense, error, or breach of etiquette; pardon is often used by courtesy in nearly the same sense. A person may speak of excusing or forgiving himself, but not of pardoning himself. Compare ABSOLVE; MERCY; PARDON, n.—Ant.: castigate, chasten, chastise, condemn, convict, correct, doom, punish, recompense, scourge, sentence, visit.—par'don-a-bl(e^{ER}, a. That may be pardoned. (2) An official warrant declaring the act of pardon. 5†. An indulgence.

Syn.: absolution, acquittal, amnesty, forbearance, forgiveness, mercy, oblivion, remission. Acquittal is a release from a charge, after trial, as not guilty. Pardon is a removal of penalty from one who has been adjudged guilty. Acquittal is the adjudging one not to be guilty, as by the decision of a court, commonly of a jury; pardon is the act of the executive. An innocent man may demand acquittal, and need not plead for pardon. Pardon supposes an offense; yet, as our laws stand, to grant a pardon is sometimes the only way to release one who has been wrongly convicted. Oblivion, from the Latin, signifies overlooking and virtually forgetting an offense, so that the offender stands before the law in all respects as if it had been never committed. Amnesty brings the same idea through the Greek. Pardon affects individuals; amnesty and oblivion are said of great numbers. Pardon is oftenest applied to the ordinary administration of law; amnesty or oblivion, to national and military affairs. An amnesty is issued after war, insurrection, or rebellion; it is often granted by "an act of oblivion," and includes a full pardon to all offenders who come within its provisions. Absolution is a religious word (compare synonyms for ABSOLVE). Remission is a discharge from penalty: as, the remission of a fine.—Ant.: penalty, punishment, retaliation, retribution, vengeance.—Prep.: a pardon to or for the offenders; for all offenses; the pardon of offenders or offenses.

SYN.: commonwealth, community, nation, population, race, state, tribe. A community is in general terms the aggregate of persons inhabiting any territory in common and viewed as having common interests; a commonwealth is such a body of persons having a common government, especially a republican government; as, the commonwealth of Massachusetts. A community may be very small; a commonwealth is ordinarily of considerable extent. A people is the aggregate of any public community, either in distinction from their rulers or as including them; a race is a division of mankind in the line of origin and ancestry; the people of the United States includes members of almost every race. The use of people as signifying persons collectively, as in the statement "The hall was full of people," has been severely criticized, but is old and accepted English, and may fitly be classed as idiomatic, and often better than persons, by reason of its collectivism. As Dean Alford suggests, it would make a strange transformation of the old hymn "All people that on earth do well" to sing "All persons that on earth do dwell." The population of a country is simply the aggregate of persons residing within its borders, without reference to race, organization, or allegiance; unnaturalized residents form part of the population, but not of the nation, possessing none of the rights and being subject to none of the duties of citizens. In American usage State signifies one commonwealth of the federal union known as the United States. Tribe is now almost wholly applied to rude peoples with very imperfect political organization; as, the Indian tribes; nomadic tribes. Compare MOB; STATE.

[< L.[OF] percipio, < per, by, + capio, take.]

Syn.: apprehend, be aware of, become cognizant of, comprehend, conceive, know, understand. We perceive, primarily, what is presented through the senses. We apprehend what is presented to the mind, whether through the senses or by any other means. Yet perceive is used in the figurative sense of seeing through to a conclusion, in a way for which usage would not allow us to substitute apprehend; as, "Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet," John iv, 19. That which we apprehend we catch, as with the hand; that which we conceive we are able to analyze and recompose in our mind; that which we comprehend, we, as it were, grasp around, take together, seize, embrace wholly within the mind. Many things may be apprehended which can not be comprehended; we can apprehend the will of God as revealed in conscience or the Scriptures; we can conceive of certain attributes of Deity, as his truth and justice, but no finite intelligence can comprehend the Divine Nature, in its fulness and perfection. Syn.: amazement, astonishment, bewilderment, confusion, distraction, disturbance, doubt, embarrassment. Perplexity (L. per, through, and plecto, plait) is the drawing of the thoughts or faculties by turns in different directions or toward contrasted or contradictory conclusions; confusion (L. confusus, from confundo, pour together) is a state in which the mental faculties are, as it were, thrown into chaos, so that the clear and distinct action of the different powers, as of perception, memory, reason, and will, is lost; bewilderment is akin to confusion, but is less overwhelming, and more readily recovered from. Perplexity has not the unsettling of the faculties implied in confusion, nor the overwhelming of the faculties implied in amazement or astonishment; it is not the magnitude of the things to be known, but the want of full and definite knowledge, that causes perplexity. The dividing of a woodland path may cause the traveler the greatest perplexity, which may become bewilderment when he has tried one path after another and lost his bearings completely. With an excitable person, bewilderment may deepen into confusion that will make him unable to think clearly or even to see or hear distinctly. Amazement results from the sudden and unimagined occurrence of great good or evil or the sudden awakening of the mind to unthought-of truth. Astonishment often produces bewilderment, which the word was formerly understood to imply.
